

George Heath, one of the new proprietors of the Main street restaurant is a lightning change man. Only a few weeks ago he was a government homesteader and a cow boy on the plains of No man's land, western Oklahoma, and now here he is dispensing refreshments as if he was born to the work. He will be found to be both clever and accomodating and the restaurant under its new management will be popular.